

THE STATUS OF RANKED-CHOICE VOTING

RCV is harder for voters and election administrators. Yet a massive, nationwide campaign is pushing RCV at every level. The Stop RCV Coalition stands for simple, fair, transparent elections.

In 2022 and 2023, five states banned RCV, with another six enacting bans in 2024. As of June 2026, eight more states have banned RCV, bringing the total to 19. Just two states use RCV for state-level elections.

RANKED-CHOICE VOTING MAKES IT

HARDER TO VOTE

HARDER TO COUNT

HARDER TO TRUST

The Stop RCV coalition defends the traditional American democratic process. We want transparent elections that can be verified by hand recounts and audits. That's not too much to ask when it comes to the foundation of our system of government.

RISKS OF RANKED-CHOICE VOTING

Instead of a normal election process, RCV has voters rank candidates, then uses an algorithm to count, adjust, and recount the votes—often many times over. Ballots may be discarded for ranking too few candidates.

1. RCV is harder for voters and election workers
2. RCV encourages fringe candidates and splinter parties
3. RCV is slow and dependent on technology that many voters don't trust

States can pass laws to prohibit RCV in state and local elections, and officials should oppose any attempt to adopt RCV at the state or local level.
